

Huge New Distribution Center Helps All States Ag Parts Serve Farmers Fast

All States Ag Parts opened a new parts distribution center this past spring in Lake Mills, Iowa. The new facility is designed to help All States Ag Parts keep up with the growing demand for new aftermarket, used and rebuilt parts. The new distribution center allows orders placed on the website, TractorPartsASAP.com, to be shipped the same day if the order is placed before 4 p.m.

“When a piece of equipment is down, farmers need to be able to get the correct parts quickly. The new distribution helps us achieve this goal and deliver parts even more quickly than before,” says John Dyke, President and CEO of All States Ag Parts.

“The company’s continued growth and success created the need for a larger distribution facility to better serve our farming customers,” says Dyke. “We’re moving from approximately 15,000 sq. ft. of distribution space in De Soto, Iowa to over 219,000 sq. ft. in Lake Mills,” said Dyke. “We plan to have over 50,000 different parts in stock in Lake Mills in the near future and will be shipping them worldwide.”

“We know the farm economy has struggled for the past 18 months or so,” says Dyke. “Despite the downturn our business has thrived. We offer quality products at a better price than the local ag dealerships and hard-working farm families appreciate keeping that money in their own pockets.”

“We have confidence in the American farmer and think the future of ag is very bright. This facility gives us the ability to serve today’s farmers during tough times and to position us for growth that will allow us to serve them even better in the future,” adds Dyke.

All States Ag Parts was founded in 1998 by David Dyke and his sons, Paul and John. The headquarters is located in Downing, Wis., with purchasing and marketing functions performed in De Soto, Iowa. The company employs 237 people in six states.
