"THEY LOOK LIKE NEW WHEN I'M DONE"

He Runs "Repair Shop" For Old Farm Toys

Jack Rupp does a brisk business restoring old farm toys in his spare time on his farm near Fayette, Ohio.

He also customizes many toys with lights, 3-pt. hitches, front-end weights, etc.

"I restore toys for myself and for a few other people during the winter," says Rupp, who shows some of his restored toys at local toy shows every year. "I charge $30 per hour for labor plus any missing parts. It costs about $50 to restore a pedal tractor, depending on the shape it's in. When I'm done with it, it looks like new.

"However, whether or not an old toy tractor should be restored is a big question. Some collectors insist on leaving toys just as they find them. Generally, I prefer to restore a tractor to its original condition, but if 85% of the paint is on the tractor and it's in good condition I don't touch it except to replace missing parts. Parts such as wheels, axles, cabs, seats, steering wheels, rear ends, and decals are replaceable items. If the tractor is unpainted, I match the colors as close as possible. If desired, I can do as nice a paint job as you'd get at the factory.

"As long as the main hood casting isn't broken, I can restore any tractor. If the hood casting is broken it's generally too expensive to repair."

This Deere 60 pedal tractor, complete with umbrella, is first tractor Rupp restored. He takes it with him to toy shows.
